Citations go inside square brackets and are separated by semicolons. Each citation must have a key, composed of '@' + the citation identifier from the database, and may optionally have a prefix, a locator, and a suffix. The citation key must begin with a letter, digit, or _, and may contain alphanumerics, _, and internal punctuation characters (:.#$%&-+?<>~/). Here are some examples:

Blah blah (see Urma, Fusco, and Mycroft 2014, 33–35; also Osherove 2014, chap. 1).

Blah blah (Urma, Fusco, and Mycroft 2014, 33–35, 38–39 and passim).

Blah blah (Osherove 2014; Urma, Fusco, and Mycroft 2014).

pandoc-citeproc detects locator terms in the CSL locale files. Either abbreviated or unabbreviated forms are accepted. In the en-US locale, locator terms can be written in either singular or plural forms, as book, bk./bks.; chapter, chap./chaps.; column, col./cols.; figure, fig./figs.; folio, fol./fols.; number, no./nos.; line, l./ll.; note, n./nn.; opus, op./opp.; page, p./pp.; paragraph, para./paras.; part, pt./pts.; section, sec./secs.; sub verbo, s.v./s.vv.; verse, v./vv.; volume, vol./vols.; ¶/¶¶; §/§§. If no locator term is used, "page" is assumed.

pandoc-citeproc will use heuristics to distinguish the locator from the suffix. In complex cases, the locator can be enclosed in curly braces (using pandoc-citeproc

0.15 and higher only): (Osherove 2014, ii, A, D–Z, with a suffix) (Osherove 2014, iv, vi–xi, (xv)–(xvii) with suffix here)

A minus sign (-) before the @ will suppress mention of the author in the citation. This can be useful when the author is already mentioned in the text: smith04 says blah (2014).

You can also write an in-text citation, as follows:

Osherove (2014) says blah.

Osherove (2014, 33) says blah.
